

Educated both in Canada and the United States, I have studied peace movements in history for the past thirty years. I have come to see the integral nature of the ageless concept of world peace, which cuts across environmental, cultural, economic, and political aspects of life in the twenty-first century.